Association of Siamese Architects under Royal Patronage (ASA) is impressed by how Design for Disasters (D4D) has successfully raised funds for nine schools and managed the donation with transparency.

Five months after the earthquake, the team's strong network of multidisciplinary professionals raised 800,000 USD through conventional media, social media, auction, exhibition, and friends.

Besides the donation through ASA, the team and its network chose to let the donors pay directly to the schools, ensuring all the donation is used for the project which expects to complete in 2015. The team's expenses are covered by the workshops they hold for organizations.
